Red Coat Is Good Producer

George Wooldridge stands hip deep in a field of Redcoat Wheat. George estimates that this wheat will yield 50 bushels per acre. A strong straw is characteristic of this wheat that is standing after heavy rain and winds of the past week end.

And Then More Rain ...

The weather man predicted warm, clear skies for the week end. Many acres of hay ended like this – rain damaged!

Farm ponds that have been over-fertilized often produce excessive amounts of algae. It's unattractive, odorous, and bothersome to the fisherman and may be toxic to live stock.

Copper sulfate is useful in controlling algae without injury to fish when used correctly.

There is a new form of copper on the market called "Chelated Copper Complex." The manufacturer says that this material will not precipitate; therefore, it remains in solution for a longer period of time and continues to be active.

The best time to divide a clump of bearded iris is immediately after blooming.

The leaves should be cut back to about eight inches. Prepare a good bed that's been well worked, add some peat moss and 3 pounds of 5-10-5 fertilizer per 100 square feet. Mix thoroughly.

Cover the rhizomes not more than one-half inch deep--it's O, K, if the top of the rhizome is exposed. This helps reduce the possibility of rot.
